ITEM 2: LMM 25/02/2020 - NATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS CHARTER: A UNIFIED APPROACH TO MENTAL HEALTH AND SUICIDE PREVENTION

MOTION

That City of Newcastle:

1. Notes that in September 2018, Everymind launched the National Communications Charter: A unified approach to mental health and suicide prevention (The Charter), aimed at assisting governments, organisations, community groups and individuals to play a role in reducing stigma around mental illness and suicide, while also promoting help-seeking behaviour through its guiding principles and messages;

2. Commends Everymind for developing this important tool, and their incredible work to unite organisations across Australia to promote communicating in ways that promote improving our mental health awareness and suicide prevention;

3. Signs the National Communications Charter: A unified approach to mental health and suicide prevention; and commits to reducing stigmatising language and promoting help-seeking and help-offering behaviour in our City’s communications;

4. Takes a leadership role when it comes to breaking down barriers and removing the stigma of mental illness and suicide, both for our staff, and across the broader community.

BACKGROUND:

The National Communications Charter was originally developed in 2014 by organisations who communicate regularly with the community, and with the support of the National Mental Health Commission.

The Charter is a document designed to guide the way organisations talk about mental health and suicide prevention, with each other and with the community.

It serves as a formal commitment to working together and developing better structures and processes for collaboration. The aim is to reduce stigma and promote help-seeking behaviour.

It was redeveloped and operationalised in 2017-2018, under the guidance of a Champions group who were representing the mental health and suicide prevention sectors, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, LGBTI people, people with lived experience of suicide, people with lived experience of mental illness and people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds.

The Charter is hosted on the Life in Mind portal, providing organisations and communities with access to tools such as current information, programs, services, resources and research within suicide prevention in Australia. Everymind will oversee The Charter on behalf of the sector, ensuring shared responsibility and dialogue for its ongoing development and implementation.
Charter Principles Explained

The National Communications Charter provides an opportunity for governments, organisations, community groups and individuals to play a role in reducing stigma around mental illness and suicide, while also promoting help-seeking behaviour through its guiding principles and messages.

There are eight principles in The Charter which have been developed to guide the way organisations, communities and individuals talk about mental health and suicide prevention. Serving as a formal national commitment to developing and improving processes for collaboration, the principles provide a tangible way to put policy into practice.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Principle One: Make mental health, wellbeing and suicide prevention a priority issue</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>What can you do?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Integrate the principle into workplace policy.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Normalise help-seeking and help offering in the workplace.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identify opportunities to organise workplace activities that support mental health and wellbeing.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Principle Two: Share nationally consistent information and messages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>What can you do?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ensure communication messages are consistent and in line with evidence-based information about mental health and suicide prevention.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Incorporate communications messages into all workplace communications and correspondence.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Principle Three: Use The Charter as a guide for strategic communications, advocacy and awareness raising

- Review existing internal and external communications strategy to identify opportunities to embed and support principles.
- Review existing communications collateral such as internal and external newsletters and marketing material.
- Identify opportunities to share The Charter’s key messages as part of any advocacy and awareness raising.

Principle Four: Respect the diversity of experience of those affected by mental ill-health or suicide

- Recognise the experience of mental ill-health or suicide is varied, complex and differs on an individual basis.
- Ensure a range of voices from those with lived experience are considered and incorporated in policy and service design.

Principle Five: Use appropriate, respectful and person-centred language in all communication

- Look for opportunities to learn and improve language around mental ill-health and suicide.
- Encourage others to do so by leading by example including via social media.
- Review available evidence based language guidelines including on professional and personal levels.
Principle Six: Work together to maximise efforts and resources

- Look for opportunities to collaborate with other organisations or across sectors and industries.
- Show support for other evidence-based or best practice initiatives.
- Encourage staff to support each other in implementing guidelines on professional and personal levels.

Principle Seven: Acknowledge those with lived experience of mental ill-health and suicide

- Recognise the contribution that those with lived experience of mental ill-health and lived experience of suicide can make to policy and service design.
- Respect, support and safely engage people with lived experience.

Principle Eight: Promote crisis services and help-seeking information

- Promote and display help-seeking information in the workplace.
- Always include visible and relevant help-seeking information in any communications collateral or content that touches on suicide and mental ill-health.
- Insist on inclusion of help-seeking information for any media engagement or stories covering mental ill-health or suicide.
Signing The Charter

People involved in mental health and suicide prevention, government, business and community groups are encouraged to sign The Charter.

As signatories to The Charter, we pledge to:

- Use positive, person-centred and respectful language
- Base strategic communications, advocacy and awareness-raising efforts on the guiding principles and key messages in The Charter.
- Work together to deliver clear, consistent and coordinated community awareness and advocacy activities
- Share knowledge about best practice communication and resources
- Work together to keep mental ill-health and suicide prevention prominent in the national conversation and amplify each other’s efforts
- Support the promotion of appropriate crisis services and help-seeking information in the media when mental health or suicide (including thinking about suicide, suicide attempts and bereavement) is referred to or features in stories or programs.

Language Guide

The language we use to talk about suicide and mental illness can contribute to stigma and alienate members of the community.

The National Communications Charter has developed a number of tools in the form of a series of language guides to support individuals, workplaces and communities.

By following the preferred language guidelines everyone can play a role in helping to reduce stigma and increase help seeking behaviour.

Language around mental illness

There are a range of mental illnesses and each individual's experience of mental illness is varied and complex.

This one of multiple reasons why it is important to avoid using stigmatising language which may polarise, stereotype or alienate individuals or groups of individuals.

The Charter is supporting workplaces, communities and individuals to use of inclusive, safe and positive language around mental illness through the development of the language guide outlined below.
Language around suicide

Suicide is a public health issue that affects individuals, families, workplaces and communities across Australia.

It is an important issue of community concern and needs to be discussed. However, there is often confusion about what is meant by “discussing” or “talking about” suicide, and confusion about the evidence.

The Charter is a document designed to guide the way organisations talk about mental health and suicide prevention, with each other and with the community.

It serves as a formal commitment to working together and developing better structures and processes for collaboration.

Please consider the following guidelines when considering a discussion around suicide.
National Communications Charter

Tool one: Language guide - suicide

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Do say</th>
<th>Don’t say</th>
<th>Why?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| ✔️ ‘died by suicide’
   ‘took their own life’ | ✗ ‘successful suicide’
   ‘unsuccessful suicide’ | Because it suggests suicide is a desired outcome |
| ✔️ ‘took their own life’
   ‘died by suicide’ | ✗ ‘committed suicide’
   ‘commit suicide’ | Because it associates suicide with crime or sin |
| ✔️ ‘increasing rates’
   ‘higher rates’ | ✗ ‘suicide epidemic’ | Because it sensationalises suicide |
| ✔️ ‘suicide attempt’
   ‘non-fatal attempt’ | ✗ ‘failed suicide’
   ‘suicide bid’ | Because it can glamourise suicide attempts |
| ✔️ refrain from using the term suicide out of context | ✗ ‘political suicide’
   ‘suicide mission’ | Because it is an inaccurate use of the term ‘suicide’ |

If you or anyone you know needs help:

- Lifeline on 13 11 14
- Kids Helpline on 1800 551 800
- MensLine Australia on 1300 789 978
- Suicide Call Back Service on 1300 659 467
- Beyond Blue on 1300 224 636
- Headspace on 1800 650 890
- ReachOut at au.reachout.com
- Care Leavers Australasia Network (CLAN) on 1800 008 774

Attachments:

Nationals Communications Charter: A unified approach to mental health and suicide prevention
National Communications Charter

A unified approach to mental health and suicide prevention

Life in Mind
Australia has made great progress in improving mental health awareness and suicide prevention, but we still have a way to go. One in five Australians will experience a mental illness this year alone – that’s millions of people who need support, treatment and a tailored roadmap to recovery.

As Chair of the National Mental Health Commission, I see firsthand how important it is to have a cumulative approach to the awareness of mental health and suicide prevention. Clarity, consistency and collaboration are vital if we want to maximise our efforts.

Australia is fortunate to have a host of organisations across different levels contributing to improving mental health, increasing awareness of mental illness and eliminating associated stigma. But with such a variety of players in the one field, the need for consistency becomes greater.

By guiding the way we talk about mental health and suicide prevention, with each other and the community, the National Communications Charter (The Charter) serves as a valuable resource for the work we all do. It combines our efforts and streamlines our vision for greater awareness, and better mental health and wellbeing.

A commitment to The Charter is a commitment to how we can all talk about our nation’s mental health and wellbeing. Uniting organisations across sectors, whether it be government, business or communities maximises the incredible efforts currently underway in the mental health space.

I encourage everyone working in the mental health and suicide prevention sectors, as well as government, workplaces and community groups, to sign up to The Charter and to align our work with its guiding principles and key messages.

Communicating in ways that promote awareness and encourage people to seek help is the first step in assisting those one in five Australians now and into the future.

Lucy Brogden
Chair, National Mental Health Commission
For a charter to be a purposeful document people need to believe in it, be prepared to sign it and genuinely strive to meet its guidelines... without your buy-in and commitment, it becomes another piece of paper on the shelf - and they don’t save lives!

BRONWEN EDWARDS
ROSES IN THE OCEAN
Clear, consistent communication is so important for our communities. We have a responsibility to speak with one voice and provide respectful, consistent, evidence-based information.

NADEAN WELLER
BEYOND BLUE

Why
We agree to follow The Charter because we want to reduce suicide and its impacts and improve the mental health and social and emotional wellbeing of people, families and communities across Australia.

To do this, we need to communicate in ways that, principally, do no harm, but also in ways that actively work to increase help-seeking and help-offering behaviour and reduce the stigma surrounding mental illness and suicide.

Working together, we can maximise our efforts and our resources to help prevent mental illness and suicide and minimise the personal, social and economic impacts on people, families, communities and organisations.

Signing The Charter
People involved in mental health and suicide prevention, government, business and community groups are encouraged to sign The Charter. As signatories to The Charter, we pledge to:

– Use positive, person-centred and respectful language.
– Base strategic communications, advocacy and awareness-raising efforts on the guiding principles and key messages in The Charter.
– Work together to deliver clear, consistent and coordinated community awareness and advocacy activities.
– Share knowledge about best practice communication and resources.
– Work together to keep mental ill-health and suicide prevention prominent in the national conversation and amplify each other’s efforts.
– Support the promotion of appropriate crisis services and help-seeking information in the media when mental health or suicide (including thinking about suicide, suicide attempts and bereavement) is referred to or features in stories or programs.

Background
The Charter was originally developed in 2014 by organisations who communicate regularly with the community, and with the support of the National Mental Health Commission.

It was redeveloped and operationalised in 2017-2018, under the guidance of a Champions Group representing the mental health and suicide prevention sectors, industry, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans, and/or intersex (LGBTI) people, people with lived experience of suicide, people with lived experience of mental illness and people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds.

The Charter is hosted on the Life in Mind online portal.
Principles

As signatories to The Charter, we:

– Acknowledge that improving the mental health and social and emotional wellbeing of people, families and communities and helping people to live contributing lives is a national priority that requires sustained action from governments and communities.

– Believe in honest, open and plain English communication that is person-centred, respectful and safe.

– Agree that nationally consistent information for, and messages to, communities are vital to avoid misinformation and confusion.

– Will collaborate to achieve coordinated and complementary community awareness, education and communication activities, maximising our efforts and resources.

– Will base advocacy and awareness-raising efforts on clear, consistent and evidence-based messages about mental health, mental ill-health and suicide prevention.

– Acknowledge the strength and resilience of people with lived experience of suicide and people with lived experience of mental ill-health and are privileged to share their stories and expertise through our work.

– Value and respect the diversity of individuals and communities affected by mental ill-health and suicide and that approaches to communicating about these topics vary across communities and generations.

– Support the promotion of crisis services, help-seeking and help-offering information.

It is only through working together that we can inspire more Australians to have genuine life-changing conversations and move closer to our vision of a world where everyone is connected and protected from suicide.

BRENDAN MAHER, MOVEMBER
Key messages

This section of The Charter articulates a series of key messages about mental health, social and emotional wellbeing, mental ill-health and suicide prevention.

Drawn from the evidence, and in line with The Charter’s principles, the key messages should underpin all strategic communications in these areas.

These central messages form the basis of all the key messages that follow.

- Mental health, social and emotional wellbeing, mental ill-health and suicide prevention are issues of national importance.¹
- Mental health and mental ill-health are determined by multiple and interacting social, cultural, psychological and biological factors, at individual, family and community levels as well as broader social and institutional levels.
- Individuals, families and communities have an essential voice and right to self-determination in matters of mental health, mental ill-health and suicide prevention.

The Charter’s guiding principles and key messages underpin the life-saving work of increasing help-seeking behaviours and reducing the stigma surrounding suicide.

CHEZ CURNOW
COUNTRY SA PHN
Mental health is a positive concept that is sometimes misunderstood and used to refer to mental ill-health. However, mental health is a desirable quality in its own right. It is about wellness rather than illness and relates to feeling resilient, enjoying life and being able to connect with others.

Mental health can be built and maintained through a combination of protective factors such as positive relationships and connections to community, cultural identity, physical activity, creative expression, sense of purpose, economic security, availability of opportunities and others. These factors can be thought of as strengths or assets that can help protect a person from experiencing mental health problems, by either reducing their exposure to risk factors (like negative life events) or increasing their ability to cope with them. The promotion of mental health and wellbeing is in every person's interest; we can all do something to promote mental health, including building healthy public policy, creating supportive environments, strengthening communities to take action, developing personal skills and reorienting services.

Key messages:
- Mental health is what we strive for and is more than the absence of illness.
- Optimal mental health and wellbeing requires an approach that addresses the whole person, acknowledging the interconnection of mental health, physical health, social connections, sense of identity and other aspects.
- Protective factors enhance and protect mental health and reduce the likelihood that mental ill-health will occur.
- Protective factors can operate at individual, family and community levels as well as at broader social, cultural and institutional levels.
- Addressing systems and processes that facilitate social exclusion, invisibility, stigma and discrimination can help reduce exposure to risk factors and support mental health and wellbeing.

Mental health increases the ability of people and communities to realise goals and potential, to cope with the normal stresses of everyday life, to work productively and to contribute to society.
Social and emotional wellbeing

Social and emotional wellbeing is the basis for both physical and mental health for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and communities.

This holistic concept includes but extends beyond conventional concepts of mental health and mental illness. It recognises the importance of cultural determinants of health such as relationships with family, kin and community, and connections to land and sea, culture, spirituality and ancestry, as well as social determinants such as employment, housing and education.4

The Gayaa Dhuwi (Proud Spirit) Declaration outlines the importance of social and emotional wellbeing for improving the mental health of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. This includes the need for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leadership and to include the concept across all parts of the Australian mental health system.5

The following are guiding principles that shape the concept of social and emotional wellbeing:

1. Health as holistic.
2. The right to self-determination.
3. The need for cultural understanding.
4. The impact of history in trauma and loss.
5. Recognition of human rights.
6. The impact of racism and stigma.
7. Recognition of the centrality of kinship.
8. Recognition of cultural diversity.
9. Recognition of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander strengths.6

Factors that protect the wellbeing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and are a source of potential strength and resilience include connection to land, culture, spirituality and ancestry; kinship; self-determination, community governance and cultural continuity.7

Key messages:

- Health is holistic not only in the sense of being about the whole person; it is also about whole communities.
- Social and emotional wellbeing is tied to social, emotional, spiritual and cultural areas of life.
- Social and emotional wellbeing includes but extends beyond conventional concepts of mental health and mental illness.
Mental ill-health

Mental ill-health is a broad term that includes both mental illness and mental health problems. A mental illness is a disorder diagnosed by a medical professional that significantly interferes with a person’s cognitive, emotional or social abilities. Examples include depression, anxiety, schizophrenia and eating disorders. These can all occur with varying degrees of severity.

A mental health problem can reduce a person’s cognitive, emotional or social abilities, but not to the extent that it meets the criteria for a mental illness diagnosis. These problems can result from life stressors, and often resolve with time or when the individual’s situation changes. A mental health problem may develop into a mental illness if it persists or increases in severity.

Mental ill-health can have personal, social and economic costs for individuals, families and communities. This can include social isolation, relationship breakdowns, unemployment and undue financial stress, homelessness, social stigma and other forms of discrimination.

Recovery is different for every person with mental illness. With no single definition, recovery is best described as a process, sometimes ongoing and lifelong, defined and led by the person with the illness, through which they can achieve independence, self-esteem and a meaningful and contributing life in the community.

People with lived experience should see The Charter as a rock solid foundation to develop generations of teamwork. It says, you are worthwhile and you are necessary.

Key messages:

- The prevention of mental ill-health is in every person, community and government’s interest.
- Mental ill-health touches people of all ages and from all walks of life.
- People with mental illness can and do lead full and meaningful lives.
- Mental ill-health is not always visible.
- Seeking help early leads to improved outcomes and can reduce future problems.
- Reducing discrimination, stigma and prejudice can encourage people to seek help.
- Many factors contribute to help-seeking and recovery including access to good clinical treatment, support that reduces the impact of symptoms and other barriers to participation and inclusion in society, a safe home, strong relationships, peer support, jobs or volunteering and financial security.

We strive for mentally healthy people and communities and encourage everyone to help shed a more positive light on mental health and reduce stigma around mental illness.

LACHLAN SEARLE
MENTAL HEALTH AUSTRALIA

People with lived experience should see The Charter as a rock solid foundation to develop generations of teamwork. It says, you are worthwhile and you are necessary.

CAMERON SOLNORDAL
SANE SPEAKERS BUREAU
Suicide prevention

Discussions surrounding suicide can cover a range of behaviours including thinking about suicide (ideation), planning a suicide, attempting suicide (including self-harm) and taking one’s own life.

The reasons for suicide are complex and multifaceted, influenced by the vulnerabilities, risk factors and events in a person’s life and their interactions with other social, cultural, economic and environmental factors. Not everyone who dies by suicide has a mental illness, although some people may have an increased risk of suicide because of a diagnosed mental illness.

The relationship between suicide and self-harm is also complex. Research shows many people who self-harm do not have suicidal thoughts at the time but all may be considered to have a higher risk of further, more severe self-harm and later suicide.

Despite the complexity of addressing the causes and contributing factors of suicide, what is clear is that it has a profound impact not only on the person who is suicidal but also their family, friends, carers, workplaces, schools and communities.

Suicide prevention aims to decrease the number of people who die by suicide or attempt suicide each year, focusing on reducing risk factors for suicide and enhancing protective factors that prevent suicide and suicidal behaviour.

Key messages:

- Suicide prevention is in every person, community and government’s interest.
- Every suicide is a tragedy with far-reaching, long lasting, significant impact on individuals, families, workplaces and communities.
- The reasons for suicide are complex and multifaceted.
- Many suicides are preventable.
- Suicide is not always connected to mental illness.
- All suicidal behaviour should be taken seriously.
- Reducing discrimination, stigma and prejudice associated with suicidal behaviour and those impacted can help encourage people to seek help.
- Building social connections and networks is a good place to start in suicide prevention.
- Communities can play a critical role in suicide prevention by giving people a sense of belonging or a feeling of connectedness, reducing stigma, developing their skills to support someone in crisis, and providing social support or referrals to appropriate services.
- People can have needs that are specific to their identity or community. It is also important to recognise that people can have multiple and overlapping, and sometimes conflicting, roles and responsibilities within communities, which can affect how they understand and seek help for suicidal behaviours in themselves or others.

It is vital for the community to work together to reduce the number of lives lost to suicide and to support those left behind and a key way to do this is by finding ways to communicate openly and honestly about suicide and its impact.

JO ROBINSON
ORYGEN
The Charter aims to build the capacity of all sectors and people to play a role in the promotion of mental health and wellbeing and the prevention of suicide.

JAELEA SKEHAN
EVERYMIND
What can you and your organisation do?

Signing The Charter isn’t the end of the story. Below are some activities that will help support the principles and key messages of The Charter within your organisation or local community.

Educate
- Share The Charter with new employees and communications staff.
- Share or display resources that help staff identify early signs and symptoms of mental ill-health or suicidal behaviour.
- Offer staff the opportunity to do workshops or training programs. There are community and workplace training programs in suicide prevention (e.g. Life in Mind gatekeeper training) and mental health (e.g. HeadsUp; Mentally Healthy Workplace Alliance).
- Ensure people with lived experience of mental ill-health and people with lived experience of suicide are appropriately trained and supported (e.g. Our Voice in Action; SANE employer resources).

Join In
- Organise or encourage participation in programs/days that promote help-seeking and help-offering behaviours (e.g. World Suicide Prevention Day – September 10; RUOK? Day – 2nd Thursday in September; World Mental Health Day – October 10).
- Plan or encourage programs to enhance protective factors and social connectedness within the workplace (e.g. supporting a social committee, morning teas or lunchtime activities, or work-based teams for sport or fitness events).
- Plan or encourage programs to enhance protective factors and social connectedness in the local community (e.g. supporting local sporting clubs, craft groups, musical or theatre organisations, cultural groups and volunteer groups).

Collaborate
- Utilise Life in Mind to share information about your organisation and its work.

Praise and Promote
- Find and support programs or services that uphold the principles of The Charter in your local community and consider nominating them for an award (e.g. LiFE Awards; Mental Health Matters Awards).
- Advocate for equity of access and culturally-specific, age-appropriate and community-based programs and services.

Engage
- Engage people with lived experience of mental ill-health and lived experience of suicide (e.g. membership on boards, participation in consultation groups, co-authorship of articles, co-design of proposals).
- Engage with populations and communities with heightened risk that require specific and targeted interventions to ensure adequate and appropriate support for these groups (e.g. community forums or surveys, representation in consultation groups, co-design of proposals).

Use Evidence
- Support evidence-based programs, services and treatments.
- Link to evidence-based information where available (e.g. Mindframe’s ‘Facts and stats’ webpage has the most up-to-date information on suicide for media professionals).
- Where evidence is not available, organisations should draw on the knowledge and strengths of the population or community in focus to develop appropriate programs and responses.

Use Safe Language
- Empower people to talk safely about mental ill-health and suicide (e.g. Conversations Matter; Communities Matter; RUOK? How to ask; #YouCanTalk).
- Use appropriate, non-stigmatising language in your communications (e.g. Mindframe guidelines).
- Provide consistent and clear messages when discussing mental ill-health and suicide (e.g. Life in Mind’s Glossary of Terms).
- Update organisational social media policy with guidelines about appropriate sharing or linking of international messages about suicide so they follow Australia’s national guidelines.

Use Safe Images
- Images are just as powerful as language and messaging; choose images that don’t stereotype or stigmatise (e.g. SANE Australia’s report Picture This: How Australians picture mental illness gives some guidelines for choosing images).
References and notes

The Fifth Plan was endorsed by COAG Health Council members on 4 August 2017, and articulates the importance of these issues nationally.

Note: While social and emotional wellbeing is discussed in the literature as an Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander concept, the term may also be used by other people who have different concepts of mental health and mental ill-health.

Note: These guiding principles were first presented in the Social Health Reference Group’s 2004 framework and reinforced in subsequent documents.

A commitment to The Charter is a commitment to how we can all talk about our nation’s mental health and wellbeing. Uniting organisations across sectors, whether it be government, business or communities maximises the incredible efforts currently underway in the mental health space.

LUCY BROGDEN
NATIONAL MENTAL HEALTH COMMISSION